

About

What if children are right about the things that really matter?

What if the wisdom of the ages is as contained in their pure selves

as they are themselves self contained?

What if everything you need to know about child raising is to be learned from your child, and in turn from yourself?

What does an adult really know about the world given the way he, unlike children, struggles to achieve happiness after his basic needs have been satisfied? How can we irritable, lumbering adults look at a graceful child and imagine we have any idea what to teach her about life?

What keeps going wrong with the world? Aren't all our social problems connected to what happens to us as children? Don't we learn the fundamentals on how to treat others from the way we were treated in childhood?

I invite you to discover with me what it really means to stand up for children.
